additional aligners for treatment correction

If aligners are not fitting correctly or the treatment goals have changed, new impressions or a scan and photographs can be processed in order for a new set of aligners to be issued. When a treatment correction set of aligners are made the treatment length will be re-examined and extended. The orthodontist treating you will determine if you need a treatment correction.

ADDITIONAL ALIGNERS FOR REFINEMENT

On completion of the initial or mid-course correction sets of aligners, if there are any final adjustments that need to be made (for example: minor tooth rotations or closing of gaps etc), then this can be achieved through additional refinement aligners. New impressions or a scan and photographs will be taken in order for Invisalign to make additional sets of aligners that will produce the final tooth movements to reach the desired results.

Additional refinement aligners can extend the length of treatment and your orthodontist will help you understand why these are necessary. The number of additional refinement sessions is determined by which type of Invisalign treatment you are having, for example with Invisalign full you might have three additional refinement sessions while with Invisalign I-7 you might only have one additional refinement session with a limited number of aligners.

Any records taken for additional refinements are to be submitted by a date stipulated by the orthodontist and Align Technology in order to avoid incurring any additional fees. It is important that patients wear their aligners according to the time schedules prescribed by the treating clinician i.e. you should not vary the wear time of your aligners prescribed by your orthodontist (for example: two weeks is two weeks and not more or less).
